It's an exciting time in the world of entertainment. You have more options to access television shows, movies and music to enjoy at home, without being restricted to a cable or satellite subscription. With a video streaming device and Mark Twain's Internet service, you can enjoy all kinds of streaming entertainment on your TV. Streaming devices allow you to access streaming video channels, including Netflix, Hulu Plus, YouTube, Disney, Amazon Prime Instant Video, Pandora and many of your favorite cable networks. The content provided for the network channels is not identical to what you would receive with a cable or satellite subscription, but they still provide access of current news, quality family programming and sporting events coverage. Some of the channels are free to download, while others have to be paid for up front or through a monthly subscription. Below are some of the most popular options for video streaming devices:

Roku, Apple TV or Amazon FireTV Streaming Box-All

3 of these devices cost less than $100 and are the most popular options for streaming devices. And for those who do not have an HDTV, the Roku 1 allows you to plug in to tube type TVs with RCA jacks.

Chromecast-At only $35, this is simply a device which you plug into your TV's HDMI port and allows you to projects your phone or tablet onto your TV. This device also allows you to run Netflix too!

SmartTVs-These sets have many of the capabilities of a streaming box built in. Typically a SmartTV costs more than a TV with similar specifications that cannot connect to the Internet and come loaded with Netflix and other popular streaming applications.

If you think streaming video might be for your household, Mark Twain recommends that you have an Internet download speed of at least 3.0M to enjoy this TV option. The 6.0M option would further improve the viewing experience and is only $10.00 more per month at $54.95.
